February 5

On this day in 1722, John Witherspoon was born. A Scottish Presbyterian immigrant, he was the first president of the College of New Jersey (known today as Princeton), one of the frontier "log colleges" founded to educate young men for the ministry. As one of his colony's delegates in the debate over separation from Great Britain (and the only clergyman to sign the Declaration), he exhorted his colleagues:

"Gentleman, New Jersey is ready to vote for independence. In our judgment, the country is not ripe for independence, but we are in danger of becoming rotten for the want of it, if we delay any longer!"

HUMPHREY, NATIONALISM, 85.

As the men filed into Valley Forge at the beginning of the winter of 1777-78, they passed a tall figure on a horse. He didn't greet them, but it was enough that he was there. And from where he sat, he could see that many of them were barefoot. Some were leaving bloody footprints in the snow...

At key critical junctures in this nation's history, the right man has been in the right place at the right time—often enough for those who believe that God governs in the affairs of men, to see His hand upon them. Such a man was George Washington, born on this day in 1732.
